The Value Of Contentment

Contentment is a rare quality. It is the ability to be satisfied with what one has. It is not a luxury, but a necessity. Without contentment, one will always be dissatisfied and unhappy. It is the secret to a peaceful and happy life. One should learn to appreciate the things that are already in their hands, instead of always wanting more. Contentment is a virtue that should be cultivated in everyone.

Scientists Learned Something

Using Fig 10 to Secure Data About Nervous Disorders

Scientists have discovered that the use of Fig 10 can help in the diagnosis and treatment of nervous disorders. This new method involves the use of a special device that can measure the electrical activity of the brain. By analyzing this data, doctors can identify the source of the problem and prescribe the appropriate treatment. This is a significant breakthrough in the field of neurology.

Fairly Well Fixed

Shelley of the Dictators in Europe

The dictators in Europe are fairly well fixed in their positions. They have managed to maintain their power despite the challenges they face. This is due to a combination of factors, including military strength, political maneuvering, and international support. However, there are still some uncertainties about the future of these regimes.

Out Of The Past

Roman Cities Discovered In Britain

Tell Interesting History

The discovery shows days ago of a Roman villa at Poulton, near Worthing, with a bath, opus, a port, fine herring-bone, and coins dating from Trajan's time to the fourth century. Recently, the question of treasure trove in Britain, and how past the being sifted at intervals by the fact of Roman coins.

Every year some thousands of coins of the Roman era are found in different parts of the country, while excavations at Dorchester have yielded a hoard of nearly 20,000 silver coins, the largest single find for sixty-four years.

But fish museum authorities are still convinced on the discovery of the coins, which were coated and others, which have been found from Caracalla to Gallienus in the fourth century.

This collection is thought to be the most valuable ever found in Britain, and has been found in Dorchester, where excavations, came upon the site of a Roman bath.

Even more fascinating is the fact that the coins have been found in a hoard of 30,000 coins found at Blackmore, Hants, in 1873. It includes coins of

Alfred, who was king of Wessex, and coins of Edward, whose army took to place in 1066.

It is now thought that if these coins represent the treasure of a

Roman banking concern, the fact that the

Alfred, and were hidden before the night which brought him over the sea.

Most of the many Roman coins found in Britain are of silver, but the bronze coins are found occasionally. There have been two at Corbridge, North umberland, not far from the Roman Wall. Within recent times, and in both instances the coins are of silver, and interest in the most perfect "silver" condition.

Of the "silver" condition of the German Higher Command Made

Decision To Retreat

The German higher command has decided to retreat from Paris. This decision was made after a long and difficult struggle. The commanders believe that the situation in Paris is
